TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 28.

RADICAL MASS MEETING.—In response to a call, a mass meeting of the Radicals of this city was held last night, in Liberty Hall. The room was well filled. Nearly all the white members of the party present, however, occupied seats on the stage, leaving the auditorium for the colored people, and a number of white boys, who sat on the extreme rear benches, and who caused some interruption to the proceedings by their improper behavior.

The meeting was called to order by George Tucker, white, and on his motion, Josiah Thomas, colored, was unanimously elected chairman. John Hawhurst, white, member of the late State Convention from this county, was then introduced, and delivered a speech of about an hour's duration, explanatory of the course he had pursued in the body of which he had been "a constituent portion," and deprecating of the evident split that exists in the party in this county. He said that in that convention there was a man who had belonged to Pickett's Division of the Confederate Army, and had been elected by members of that division, who had said that before he would submit to negro equality he would gather the scattered fragments of his old Brigade, and from the mountains of the State renew the conflict. (The sentiments of the member of the convention alluded to, were evidently agreeable to the whites in the rear of the house, and were accordingly applauded.) He believed, however, that this gentleman was honest in his opinions, and acted from principle, and for that reason he should be disfranchised, for the State would revert to its former condition if left in his hands or the hands of those who thought like him. He said that there were men in that Convention who, having been elected by colored people, had basely betrayed them, and that there were others then elected by the same class of voters, who, though they did not actually go over to the enemy, voted against the colored man's interest by favoring a property qualification for suffrage. Then there were men in the convention, and from these different classes, with their various subdivisions, he thought that about as good a constitution had been obtained as could well have been expected. He was opposed to confiscation, and gave as one reason for his vote in favor of the $1 head tax, that unless the colored people were called upon by the Sheriff they would think they were slighted. He censured Judge Underwood for ruling out of the new Constitution an entire section, and an important one, viz: that defining citizenship.

Having gone through with the Convention, he devoted some time to the consideration of the breach in the party in this city, and asserted that as soon as he found out that he was in a minority, he would cheerfully give way for the more popular aspirant for official honors and emoluments; but that he was in the majority, and the minority was composed merely of the few who thought, like Mr. McKenzie, that a negro would not have the impudence to offer himself as a member of a Republican club! Such men did not deny the negro the right to vote, but they denied them the right to select the persons for whom they should vote. He concluded by repudiating the idea mentioned by one of the audience, as a report in circulation at the Freedmen's Village—that every man who voted for him would have to put $1.50 with his ballot into the box!

Geo. Tucker, white, the candidate of the late County Convention for Congress, then addressed the meeting, prefacing his remarks by characterizing those in the rear of the hall who had been the cause of some slight interruption as "less than human, and meaner than dogs." He eulogized the course pursued by the member of the Convention from this county, and extolled the Constitution the Convention had made, but devoted the main portion of his speech to a vindication of the wing of the party which he belongs, a justification of the proceedings of the late County Convention, and to the condemnation of the Wellites. His speech was well received, and at its termination, though there were loud calls for Hill and other speakers, and amid considerable confusion and excitement, the following resolutions, handed to the Chairman, were read and adopted by a large majority, both by the sound and by a rising vote:

Resolved, That we cordially and earnestly approve and endorse the action of the Republican County Convention, which assembled in this city on the 24th instant, in declaring their preference for John Hawhurst as their candidate for Governor, and for George Tucker as their candidate for Congress; and we also, heartily endorse the nominations made by said Convention as candidates for members of the Legislature, and we pledge them our earnest and undivided support.

Resolved, That we hereby denounce and utterly condemn the action of those delegates, who, finding themselves in the minority, seceded from said Convention, whose entire disorganizing proceedings appear to have been premeditated, and whose whole object clearly is to either ruin or ruin the Republican Party; and we earnestly hope that no true Republicans will be concerned by any such designing and intriguing politicians, but that when tempted by them they will reply in the words of Christ when tempted by the devil, "Get thee hence, Satan!"

The excitement now rose to fever heat, and the noise created was so great that nothing said could be distinctly heard. The audience were all on their feet, and moving about on the tops of the benches, and the stage was crowded with excited men of all colors, who could be seen violently gesticulating and jostling each other. During this scene, but after futile efforts of Lyander Hill to be heard, and after the Chairman had vacated his seat, W. D. Massey advanced to the foot lights and attempted to speak, but was prevented by the existing clamor and the additional cries of put him out, put him down, put out the lights, Andrew Johnson, &c. His remarks were hardly distinguishable, but among them were heard the expressions that the audience "did not know what they were doing," and that he would "like to see the man who would dare attempt to put him down." His epithets applied to several persons on the stage are understood to have been of very emphatic character. Some one with a loud voice, at this juncture, moved to adjourn, and as it was eleven o'clock, and as the excitement was abating the reporter with many of the audience left the scene of the disturbance, and soon afterwards the lights were extinguished and the house cleared—it being generally understood that another meeting would be held on Thursday night next.

Ficklin, teacher of Mathematics at St. John's Academy, at the request of the City Surveyor, yesterday, determined the boundaries of the city in the vicinity of the residence of Mr. John Hodgkin, and ascertained that that person lived outside of the city limits.
